their lust is an expression of love – love between husband and wife

By Ellis

Human beings are sexual creatures and having sexual desires is totally normal. With that general definition of humanity out of the way, it can be assumed that everyone is capable of sexual fantasies at some point in his or her life. So, why shouldn't this also be true of the frum (Jewish religiously observant) community?

The characters in these four short stores have very strong desires, but the erotic thoughts that play through their minds and across their bodies are presented without succumbing to the depravities of pornography. Instead, their lust is an expression of love – love between husband and wife, between bride and groom. There is romance here, along with the yearning for physical pleasure. Observant Jewish men and women are capable of intimacy and these stories are an acceptable stage for their passionate interactions.

There is only one thing wrong in this collection, and that is it ended all too quickly. The author clearly is capable of telling compelling erotic tales. These stories only serve to whet one's appetite for more.

Wonderful!

By Proud Hubby

What a wonderful author in an exciting yet overlooked genre! I really enjoyed Shosha's prose, as well as her versatility in her choices of subjects of and characters for her short stories. She has written Jewish erotica with a light and elegant touch of fetish, delicately incorporating themes of exhibitionism, rape, toys and cuckoldry - all within the loving confines of a committed relationship. I look forward eagerly to her next installment.
